THE BEVOLO Glow

Old World Style for the Modern Day

BY KATY BANOS | PHOTOS BY CHRIS GRANGER

Like New Orleans, Bevolo Gas and Electric Lights is steeped in history and tradition. As a fourth generation family-owned company, Bevolo exudes magnificent old world style in the modern day city that has fueled its aesthetic for over seven decades. As the oldest and largest continuously-operating gas light manufacturer in the country, Bevolo brings an unrivaled commitment to New Orleans, shining bright in the French Quarter and supporting our local economy. The iconic lanterns and lights are shipped all over the world, but each and every one is handmade locally by master craftsmen passionate about this time-honored art form.

In 1945, Andrew Bevolo, Sr., a skilled metal worker, encountered the noted Louisiana architect, A. Hays Town, and together they created the original French Quarter lantern. Years of experience at Ford, Sikorsky, and Higgins in the automobile, aviation, and landing craft industries armed Mr. Bevolo with unmatched technical expertise. His design, crafted in American-sourced copper with hand-riveted rather than soldered joints, revolutionized the production of exterior lighting. Oxidized to a beautiful caramel hue, his lanterns were built to last a lifetime and a new business was born in the French Quarter.

A visit to the Royal Street showrooms and museum is a quintessential New Orleans experience like no other. Over 40 open flame lanterns adorn an exposed brick wall leading from the street to the romantic courtyard to the living museum in the heart of the French Quarter. Open for the public to enjoy, stepping into Bevolo is as authentic to our beloved city as it gets. The Exchange

Copper, known to be one of the most durable of all metals, has a projected 300 year lifespan. The bright color is oxidized to a rich caramel hue, a Bevolo trademark.

Alley workshop is filled with memorabilia and original work tables illuminating the company's fascinating history, as well as notes about Mr. Bevolo's unique contributions to the industry. Talented coppersmiths, working with the purest sheets of metal, are at work and happy to answer questions as they share their knowledge. You can even rent this beautiful venue for private parties and special events. In an increasingly high-tech world, it is a rare treat to have access to such a charming and lovingly-preserved piece of the Quarter's cultural history.

From the most historically accurate to recent contemporary creations, there are hundreds of lighting styles to choose from. Of course, the original design is far and away the most popular, but stainless steel and custom hand-welded yokes, brackets, and mounts are also offered. The same goes for their vast array of interior lighting presented in one of the shops that flanks the main showroom. Chandeliers, sconces, and antique courtyard accessories all reflect the same impeccable quality. Their other jewel box of a shop features a carefully curated display of vibrant mid-century modern pendants and lights. It's a colorful departure from the traditional lanterns, but the love of craft and artistry is exactly the same. The collection of vintage Blenko and Murano hand-blown glass lamps, handmade shades, and one of a kind finials celebrates the Bevolo love for detail and authenticity.

No other exterior lighting fixture on the market can hold a candle to the quality, patina, and craftsmanship of a Bevolo light. The French Quarter lantern is elegant and timeless, and few things are as alluring as the burnished glow of a gas lit flame. Not just made in America, these pieces are made right here in the heart of New Orleans.

THE BATWING FLAME

A Bevolo lantern has a signature open flame, fondly coined the "batwing glow," because of the distinctive shape of its flickering light. It's not just happenstance. With patented technology, a Bevolo light is not only the most efficient natural gas burner on the market, its flame is bigger and brighter, designed to operate 24/7. The iconic "Bevolo look" is just like New Orleans – romantic, mesmerizing, and truly original.

Instead of soldering the joints of each lantern, over 97 rivets are hand tapped in using a ball-peen hammer. This is what sets the design apart in strength and longevity.

Elephants have long been a symbol of strength and good fortune. Equipped with their charming trunks and quiet power, these majestic creatures are known to have strong emotions and excellent memories. They are also among the most loyal, wise, and compassionate beings. As the largest land animal on Earth, they still manage to bring a sense of peace and comfort and a cheerful upturned trunk might just be one of the happiest sights in the kingdom. No wonder the elephant pops up on everything from lamps to jewelry to tabletop décor.
